In Today's Issue

- Much of the “economic reopening trade” has been focused on large travel and leisure companies, and many of those names have seen huge gains over the past year. But they are now saddled with massive debts and ballooning capital structures that could be headwinds on investor returns going forward. Many smaller stocks, however, were able to utilize government programs (PPP and others) to recapitalize healthily over the past year and those that have survived to this point are now in an extremely favorable position to capture future opportunities as the economy reopens.
- Invesco S&P Small Cap Consumer Discretionary ETF (PSCD). This index-based ETF selects consumer discretionary stocks from the S&P SmallCap 600 Index. One excellent attribute of the S&P 600 Index is that every stock must be profitable (positive net income over trailing four quarters) to be eligible for inclusion.
- First Trust Consumer Staples AlphaDEX Fund (FXG). This ETF is a quantitatively constructed portfolio of high-quality stocks selected from the broad Russell 1000 Index and is a good alternative for investors skittish about equity exposure right now.
- Invesco S&P SmallCap 600 Revenue ETF (RWJ). This 5-star Morningstar rated fund has over $500 million in assets and demonstrates a significant advantage in its revenue-weighted index construction methodology.
- iShares Morningstar Small-Cap Value ETF (ISCV). This ETF tracks more than 1,100 companies with value characteristics relative to their peers and are in the smallest 10% of total market capitalization.

A Fresh Angle on the Reopening Trade

The reopening playbook is one that many investors have either played or been intrigued by over the last six months. The original theory behind this trade is that the hardest hit industries from the pandemic are going to be the beneficiaries of factors such as federal stimulus payments, forgiven business loans, government grants, and Fed-driven market liquidity. These stocks have long been considered the rocket ships that you can ride to easy profits as federal and state lockdowns ease and a more normal social environment ensues.

What some haven't considered is how all these factors translate into real-world economics that may produce unintended consequences down the line. The COVID-induced lockdowns hit industries such as travel, hospitality, restaurants, entertainment, and non-essential retail quite significantly. This caused the stock prices of these companies to heavily dive a year ago and many have teetered on the edge of complete financial collapse throughout this journey.

There are really two ways that these companies survived. First, some of the larger entities were able to lean on traditional capital markets to raise additional debt or issue more common equity to sustain essential operations. This allowed them to stave off insolvency.

However, if you are a common stock investor, you can't feel great about the long-term prospects of being on the bottom of that ballooning capital structure. They essentially expanded the enterprise value to keep things afloat at the expense of long-term shareholder value.

This worked in the short term to shore up operating cash flow and stabilize investor confidence. However, much of that psychological effect is also reflected in the current share prices.

Companies such as Royal Caribbean Group and Delta Airlines have already seen their share prices appreciate more than 100% over the last 12 months. The move has effectively already been made in these areas and makes for a difficult entry point for those who are still contemplating a rotation to the industry headliners.

Second, another method used by smaller companies was to apply for many of the government-funded financial programs to get lean and mean. That means taking advantage of opportunities such as the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP) as funds to be forgiven when they are used for payroll, rents, and utilities. Utilizing the Fed-sponsored Main Street Loan facility to pay off higher interest rate debt and gain additional working capital. Furthermore, many were able to negotiate with creditors (landlords, suppliers, unions, etc.) for more favorable terms.

This has allowed many of these smaller stocks to recapitalize in a healthy. They were able to shed deadweight during the worst of the crisis and those that have survived to this point are now in an extremely favorable position to capture future opportunities.

That may come in the form of market share gains, new product launches, or other strategic initiatives. These smaller companies learned a great deal over the last 12 months and are battle-tested for the reopening thesis as it evolves into the next chapter.

The difficult part for investors at this stage of the cycle is to capitalize on areas of the reopening trade that are still functionally opportunistic without being a financial dumpster fire waiting to ignite.

You want to find the nexus between sound fundamentals and share price upside potential as the world begins to normalize towards travel, dining, and entertainment. That bullseye is most likely going to be off the beaten path of the largest market-cap weighted benchmarks and lean towards stocks with small- to mid-cap characteristics.

The following report details our research in these areas and how you can incorporate them in your client portfolios with the greatest of ease.

Investment Idea 1: Small-Cap Consumer Discretionary

The economic surge driven by individual stimulus checks, low interest rates, and loosening social restrictions is apt to be a tailwind on the consumer discretionary sector. People out in the economy returning to work, travel, and school are going to be spending dollars in areas that they didn't when the lockdown began. That will translate into money making its way from the big box brands to specialty retail, entertainment, and hospitality businesses.

The loosening restrictions in states such as New York, Texas, and California are already starting to perpetuate this trend. One anecdotal example is a friend of mine runs a large catering company in California with multiple wedding venues and event services. They have managed to survive through the pandemic by hunkering down to a small team, pivoting to packaged meals, and utilizing forgivable PPP loans to pay the bills.

He told me just recently they have booked more wedding and social business in the last three weeks than the prior nine months combined. The phone is figuratively ringing off the hook and they are gearing up for a hyper-growth environment driven by the reopening economy.

I'd love to be an investor in that private company today, but the next best thing is to look at similar publicly traded stocks that are primed for a big boost through the remainder of the year. One unique way to do that is through the Invesco S&P Small Cap Consumer Discretionary ETF (PSCD).

This index-based ETF selects consumer discretionary stocks from the S&P SmallCap 600 Index. These companies are principally engaged in providing consumer goods and services that are cyclical in nature, including retail, automotive, leisure, and recreation, media and real estate. That equates to a diversified basket of roughly 90 holdings that are market-cap weighted and rebalanced quarterly.

One excellent attribute of the S&P 600 Index is that every stock must be profitable (positive net income over trailing four quarters) to be eligible for inclusion. That means you are already starting with a portfolio of high-quality companies that elevates it above the more pedestrian Russell 2000 Index.

In practice this translates to top holdings that include GameStop, Crocs Inc, Macy's Inc, Shake Shack, and Ashbury Automotive Group. In addition, it houses well-known brands such as iRobot, Sleep Number, Callaway Golf, Brinker International, Cooper Tire, Winnebago, and more. These are all stocks that are highly minimized or even left out altogether in conventional large-cap ETFs such as XLY or VCR. The largest holding in PSCD makes up no more than 5% of the total portfolio, which creates a truly diversified capital allocation across a wide array of companies.

The PSCD basket has proven to offer meaningful alpha over the last one and three years as well. The fund has gained 185.5% over the last 52-weeks, which was likely helped by some of the massive gains in GameStop that have been headlining Wall Street of late. Nevertheless, the remaining holdings in this fund have combined to generate a healthy momentum profile that bolsters the case for continued growth as the economy regains its footing.

Admittedly, the already big run-up in PSCD means that new investors won't be getting in on the ground floor of a trend before it takes off. However, optimists that believe the U.S. economy is going to continue to expand and that consumer spending will rise in kind should be utilizing a fund of this nature to capture that growth. This ETF can be utilized as a tactical holding to focus a portion of the portfolio on this theme, while also simultaneously tilting towards smaller companies to drive that progress. It also dovetails well with an emphasis on cyclical stocks overtaking non-cyclicals at a time when we are seeing a more pronounced shift from growth to value.

Invesco S&P Small Cap Consumer Discretionary ETF (PSCD)

Expense Ratio:	0.29%
of Holdings:	91
YTD Return:	40.91%
3-Yr Return:	92.04%
Mstar Rating:	2 Star

Investment Idea 2: Smart-Beta Consumer Staples

The reopening trade is going to mean that lots of people start moving around to new places. That translates to restaurants, hotels, airlines, cruise ships, concerts, casinos, caterers, and more needing a lot of food and beverages to supply their customers. That demand curve shift should lead to reduced spending at Walmart and Costco in favor of more conventional entertainment, travel, and leisure businesses.

In prior reports we have delivered ideas for investing directly in the stocks that make up these industries. Therefore, our next move is to look deeper at the second level demand lurking in the national food and beverage producers. There is an ETF that allows you to do this through a distinctive smart-beta approach that emphasizes these F&B stocks.

The First Trust Consumer Staples AlphaDEX Fund

(FXG) is a quantitatively constructed portfolio of high-quality stocks selected from the broad Russell 1000 Index. The AlphaDEX screening criteria ranks stocks according to a combination of growth and value characteristics that scores each eligible company. Those scores are then used to select the 40 best-of-breed companies within the sector group for inclusion in the portfolio basket.

The result is a highly intelligent and active share approach to the consumer staples' theme that emphasizes a much different subset of stocks as compared to traditional benchmarks such as XLP or VDC. The underlying holdings in FXG tend to lean far more towards food and beverage producers in the small- and mid-cap realms rather than the mega-cap consumer goods companies such as Proctor & Gamble and Coca-Cola. In fact, the current breakdown of industry exposure in FXG is: Food producers (48.3%), personal care/grocery stores (43%), beverages (7%), and tobacco (1.70%).

Some of those top food and beverage producers include companies such as Tyson Foods, The J.M. Smucker Co, Ingredion Inc, and Bunge Limited. There is also exposure to Boston Beer Company, Constellation Brands, and Keurig Dr. Pepper. Furthermore, there are caps on individual security and classification weights so that the portfolio doesn't become overly biased towards larger stocks. FXG currently has nearly $300 million in total assets and charges a net expense ratio of 0.63%.

First Trust Consumer Staples AlphaDEX Fund (FXG)

Inception Date:	5/8/2007
Assets:	$272.9M
Avg Daily Volume:	11.6K
Expense Ratio:	0.63%
of Holdings:	42
YTD Return:	14.17%
3-Yr Return:	30.86%
Mstar Rating:	2 Star

The recent performance of this ETF is showing encouraging signs of relative alpha as well. FXG is besting the large-cap benchmark XLP by 35.13% versus 19.61% over the past 52-weeks. Much of that momentum has come since the beginning of the year as we have started to see a more pronounced rotation towards small-cap stocks. This fund can be utilized as a replacement for conventional benchmarks such as XLP and VDC or to gain new exposure to the consumer staples theme with an emphasis on growth companies.

There is no doubt that a trend shift in consumer behavior from stay at home to travel and leisure will increase the demand for these food and beverage producers that make up much of the FXG portfolio.

The consumer staples' theme may also be a better fit for more conservative clients that are skittish about equity exposure at this time. They may feel encouraged by the historically lower volatility of this sector and the financial resilience of the underlying holdings. FXG also sports a 30-day SEC yield of 1.75% with income paid quarterly to shareholders that is attractive to income-hungry portfolios.

Investment Idea 3: Small-Cap Value

I know that many of us are looking for alpha in different ways and sometimes a sector level position is too far outside of your existing portfolio needs or risk constraints.

That is why we want to provide you with a more conventional ETF alternative for those that want to access these same themes in a more diversified core holding.

In fact, we found two opportunities in the small-cap value arena that offer attractive ways to position for an economic rebound through the remainder of the year.

The first ETF once again piggybacks on the S&P 600 SmallCap Index by re-weighting the entire list of 600 securities by earned revenue rather than market capitalization. This unique approach results in a vastly different sector and weighting style that emphasizes value over growth, and has a noticeable tilt towards consumer discretionary stocks.

The Invesco S&P SmallCap 600 Revenue ETF (RWJ) is a 5-star Morningstar rated fund with over $500 million in assets that demonstrates a significant advantage in its revenue-weighted index construction methodology. Top sectors within the RWJ mix include consumer discretionary (27%), industrials (20%), technology (10%), and consumer staples (9%).

What the revenue screening component does is take away the impact of one-off anomalies such as GameStop, which has been catapulted to an outsized market share based on abnormal trader activity rather than actual business success. Furthermore, no single holding within the portfolio can have more than a 4% weighting, which means that assets are more evenly disbursed over a wider array of companies. Top holdings in RWJ include United Natural Foods, Core-Mark Holding Co, Macy's Inc, and Community Health Systems.

The outsized exposure to consumer discretionary stocks like those in PSCD have really made an impact on the performance of RWJ over the last year. The fund has gained 158.6% over that time frame and continues to be one of the top-performing small-cap ETFs in the marketplace.

There is no doubt that a holding such as RWJ can be utilized as a conventional core small-cap position based on its liquidity, diversified makeup, low cost, and tax efficiency. Furthermore, it checks many of the same boxes as PSCD in its emphasis in the consumer discretionary space with the added benefit of industrial, tech, and consumer staples exposure.

Many times, value indexes are loaded down with financial and energy stocks, but this fund has found the right way to contain those allocations to reasonable levels. It's certainly one of the more distinctive small-cap ETFs we have ever researched and looks to be well positioned to ride a wave of economic stimulus in this environment.

Global X U.S. Infrastructure Development ETF (RWJ)

Inception Date:	2/19/2008
Assets:	$545.5M
Avg Daily Volume:	61.7K
Expense Ratio:	0.39%
of Holdings:	594
YTD Return:	43.45%
3-Yr Return:	69.73%
Mstar Rating:	5 Star

Another excellent option that emphasizes the industrial and consumer discretionary sectors within the small-cap space is the iShares Morningstar Small-Cap Value ETF (ISCV). This ETF tracks more than 1,100 companies that demonstrate value characteristics relative to their peers and are consequently in the smallest 10% of total market capitalization. ISCV has over $400 million in assets under management and charges a miserly 0.06% expense ratio, making it extremely cost efficient as a long-term core holding.

The distinctive attribute of this exchange-traded fund is that it has meaningful exposure to airlines, cruise ship companies, smaller energy stocks, and regional banks in its list of industry groups. That means the fund is going to be more economically sensitive to the consumer discretionary, travel, and commodity sectors as compared to RWJ. Some of the top holdings in ISCV include American Airlines Group, Diamond-back Energy, Signature Bank, Norwegian Cruise Lines and Kohl's Corp.

ISCV has historically tracked closely with traditional small-cap benchmarks such as IJR and IWM. However, the fund just recently changed to a new underlying index that has led to a reshuffling of its holdings as compared to its peers. The new portfolio makeup offers a more distinctive profile without going fully into the smart-beta or enhanced index realm that leads to greater deviation from traditional benchmarks.

This ETF has gained 23.5% on a year-to-date basis and more than 92.8% over the last 52-weeks. Small-cap stocks have really taken off over the last two quarters as the U.S. dollar has settled and investors rotate towards cyclical sectors. This trend has helped act as a tailwind for the ISCV portfolio over that time frame.

This ETF would be an excellent small-cap core holding for those portfolios that are looking for more exposure to the reopening trade and are comfortable with high-beta positions. Small-cap stocks tend to run on the more volatile side and thus position sizing and their complement with other holdings in the portfolio should be evaluated with that attribute in mind.

So many investors are cognizant of the value factor underperforming for so long that it may take some convincing that this silo is where the capital appreciation story is most appealing. That is particularly true in the small-cap space where favorable economic forces have the potential to drive outsized gains.

Conclusion

Searching for value doesn't always mean diving into the most beaten-down areas of the economy. It can often manifest in well-run businesses that are thriving due to fundamental or structural circumstances. These ETFs fall into that category as opportunistic tools that can shape future portfolio decisions by capitalizing on the prevailing trend.

Moreover, if you broaden the focus on your investment lens you see a situation where these funds, despite their recent run higher, still are likely to have more upside here than one would get with an allocation to large-cap tech or the Nasdaq 100 or similar funds.

If we get the economic revival that we suspect we will, then this logic holds—and that means continued outperformance in these unique value segments.

Best,

Tom
