In Today's Issue

- Finding Value and Opportunity in International ETFs. Quality international stocks in developed markets are currently trading at heavy discounts to the S&P 500. We think the combination of low valuations and less-aggressive central banks makes international exposure an important part of a diversified investment strategy going forward.
- Schwab Fundamental International Large Company Index ETF (FNDF). FNDF weights securities by factors such as adjusted sales, retained operating cash flow, and dividends plus buybacks. The composition of these sectors combines to produce a price-to-earnings ratio of 12.40x in conjunction with a price-to-book ratio of 1.18x. FNDF has outperformed the iShares MSCI EAFE ETF (EFA) on a three- and five-year time frame.
- iShares Edge MSCI Intl Quality Factor ETF (IQLT). IQLT is a mix of growth and value, as it allocates to stocks based on earnings growth and low financial leverage, not just cheap valuations. That equates to a higher P/E of 22X, but that slightly higher valuation is offset by strong returns, as on a three-year lookback, IQLT has gained 43.38% compared to the 32.23% rise in EFA.
- Vanguard International High Dividend Yield ETF (VYMI). This $3.5 billion AUM ETF provides exposure to 1,200 foreign stocks with above average dividends. The allocation is split 80/20 between developed markets and emerging markets. With a P/E of 11X, a 4.25% yield, and strong diversification, this is an attractive "core" international holding.

International Value Opportunities

Federal Reserve Chairman Jerome Powell gave us some additional insight into the state of the U.S. economy and the roadmap for the use of monetary policy tools at the conclusion of the January FOMC meeting. His comments included the sentiment that "higher inflation, higher growth, a much stronger economy — and I think those differences are likely to be reflected in the policy that we implement."

These words were interpreted by market watchers to mean that the Fed is serious about raising rates in 2022 with the possibility of a 50-basis-point-hike in March as a jumping off point. The concomitant interpretation is that volatility should be expected, but that it's likely to be manageable given the strength of company earnings, economic activity, and inflation data. Powell didn't expressly commit to a certain outcome in the rate hike agenda, but the FOMC is certainly going to be active in its policy approach for the coming year.

What is no longer in doubt is that investors need to start dusting off their rising rates playbook and begin closely evaluating their holdings to ensure proper asset allocation. The longer-term picture is supportive of continued Fed tightening, which is likely to bolster certain areas of the market that are less sensitive to higher borrowing costs.

Our last Sevens Report Alpha issue focused on the implementation of high-quality, low-P/E stocks within the domestic market as a core foundation of this strategy. Those that have had money on the sidelines waiting for a pullback would be wise to consider these opportunities given the first quarter correction that is currently unfolding. There are also several other steps that investors can take to shape their portfolios in this type of market as well.

One of our preferred methods of analysis during these inflection points of cyclicalities is to lean on data from previous periods to guide our research. That is where we landed in examining the rate hike cycle from June 2004 through September 2007. During that period, the Fed funds rate rose from 1.25% to a healthy 5.25% before leveling off prior to the financial implosion of '07-'08.

What stood out during this period is that U.S. stocks performed admirably. The S&P 500 Index rose by a total return of 38% on a dividend-adjusted basis over that three-year time frame. That roughly tracks with double-digit annualized returns that investors would surely be thrilled within our current climate. Nevertheless, the area of the market that attained nearly double that result are international stocks. The iShares MSCI EAFE ETF (EFA) gained more than 71% as a sluggish U.S. dollar and attractive growth dynamics helped fuel significant alpha in overseas markets.

International stocks in today's environment are exhibiting many of the same fundamental signals that were present in 2004.

Namely, a much cheaper relative price-to-earnings valuation of foreign company multiples as compared to a broad basket of U.S. large-cap equities. This dovetails well with our emphasis on under-valued stocks as a primary factor consideration.

The table here shows the relatively low valuations in the benchmark international equity funds vs. the benchmark domestic equity funds. As you can see, even domestic value funds are more highly valued than most international funds.

Furthermore, we are coming off a period of U.S. dollar strength that has suppressed the returns of many international funds over the last year. The Fed changing course on its interest rate path may well signal an inflection point in the forex markets that is supportive of foreign currency strength. This would act as a tailwind for U.S. investors who own international stocks in their brokerage accounts.

Our goal with this issue is to actively identify the strongest candidates of developed international stock exposure for you to augment your valuecentric U.S. equity holdings. The combination of these regional positions will provide enhanced diversification qualities and jumpstart your portfolio returns for 2022.

Investment Idea 1: Fundamentals for The Win

Those of you that have followed this publication for some time know that we tend to place emphasis on factor screening or fundamental criteria as a driver of long-term alpha. These characteristics have never been more important than today when examining the market from a 50,000-foot overview. So many benchmarks have become top heavy with extreme outliers in market-cap weightings or overly watered down with blanket exposure to every stock available. Neither solution offers a well-balanced strategy to achieving a solid risk-versus-return profile, particularly as interest rates rise.

Fortunately, there are several smart-beta funds that have recognized this gap and exploited it to their advantage. One of those rare opportunities that combine intelligent security selection and weighting criteria is found in the Schwab Fundamental International Large Company Index ETF (FNDF).

FNDF is based on the Russell RAFI Developed ex-US Large Company Index. The methodology selects, ranks, and weights securities by fundamental measures of company size-adjusted sales, retained operating cash flow, and dividends plus buybacks — rather than market capitalization. Companies with the highest scores in these categories are included within the basket and reconstituted on a quarterly basis.

The real-world result of this clever approach is a highly diversified basket of international stocks in developed regions demonstrating low relative valuations and above average dividends. On the factor

IEMG	iShares Core MSCI Emerg Market	17.69
IEUR	iShares Core MSCI Europe	21.81
IPAC	iShares Core MSCI Pacific	16.24

side, FNDF is classified as a large-cap value fund and its portfolio makeup certainly supports that tag. Top holdings include well-known foreign stocks such as Shell PLC, BP PLC, Toyota Motor Corp, Samsung Electronics, and Nestle SA.

While there are 945 stocks in the FNDF portfolio, no single holding makes up more than 2% of the basket. This means that weightings are more equitably spread over a wide range of securities and diversification is prioritized in the index rules. Top sector weightings include Financials (19%), Industrials (14%), Consumer Discretionary (14%), Energy (11%), and Materials (10%).

The composition of these sectors combines to produce a price-to-earnings ratio of 12.40x in conjunction with a price-to-book ratio of 1.18x. Both ratios are on the low end of the spectrum when compared against conventional international benchmarks. On the geographic front, FNDF is primarily centered around globally developed nations. These include Japan (25%), the United Kingdom (17%), France (9%), Germany (8%), and Canada (7%).

Like many international funds, this smart-beta ETF has been largely trading in a sideways pattern over the last eight months. Nevertheless, it has begun to distance itself above its benchmark because of its unique characteristics. Evidence is indicating the value tilt to the FNDF portfolio has begun to demonstrate a pattern of outperformance that lends itself well to the current environment. The fund has posted returns that slightly edged out the iShares MSCI EAFE ETF (EFA) on three- and five-year time frames as well.

FNDF currently sports some $7.5 billion in assets under management and charges a modest expense ratio of 0.25% annually. It also trades approximately 1 million shares per day on average and has a deep well of liquidity for those looking to trade in larger sizes. The fund's highly diversified nature, combined with fundamentally driven stock selection criteria, make for a justifiable advantage as we stand on the precipice of a changing U.S. financial market.

This ETF is appropriate to be used as a core foreign stock vehicle for those portfolios seeking more overseas exposure in their asset allocation plans. Advisors looking to reposition internationally strictly as a tactical play may want to opt for anywhere between 15-25% of their total equity sleeve in this category. That would mean that a 60% stock sleeve would have between 9% and 15% of the total portfolio in one or two international funds.

Those that want to create a truly global equity profile may opt to mirror the venerable MSCI All Country World Index, which sports a

able MSCI All Country World Index, which sports a 60/40 split between the U.S. and foreign stocks. That 40% allocation to international means that your upper limit will increase significantly, and you will likely have more opportunities to layer in additional overseas ETFs.

Investment Idea 2: Quality Developed Stocks

One of the apprehensions of placing money overseas is that investors don't know what they are buying. They don't associate the top stocks in an international basket with household names such as Apple, Disney, or Coca-Cola here in the United States. They also may be concerned about the differentiated accounting practices, corporate laws, and government regulation of other countries impacting the trend of their share prices. Furthermore, it is much more difficult to get information about international companies compared to the transparency of domestic holdings.

An excellent way to overcome these fears is to use a "quality" factor screen in your international stock allocation. What we mean by this is selecting companies with positive fundamentals such as high return on equity, stable year-over-year earnings growth, and low financial leverage. These are going to be the cream of the crop when it comes to financial stability and is likely to be less volatile in the event of a changing economic landscape.

One of the best ways to access this group of stocks is through the iShares Edge MSCI Intl Quality Factor ETF (IQLT). This BlackRock product just celebrated its seven-year anniversary and has created an impressive track record backed by its 300 underlying holdings – all of which are domiciled outside the United States.

Top country weightings include the following developed nations: United Kingdom (16%), Switzerland (14%), Japan (13%), France (10%), and Canada (8%). The top individual holdings are dominated by large-cap stocks in sectors such as healthcare, consumer staples, financials, and technology. Think stocks such as Roche Holdings, ASML Holdings, Nestle SA, and Allianz. No single holding makes up more than 4% of the total assets within IQLT.

The fund has grown to encompass $4.2 billion in assets under management and charges a reasonable expense ratio of 0.30%. That cost may be slightly higher than plain vanilla international indexes from Schwab or Vanguard, but well within tolerance for a smart-beta fund with a performance record that bests its peers.

It should be noted that the quality screening criteria that drives stock selection in the IQLT basket does not specifically target low-valuation holdings. Instead, it's focused on other fundamental criteria such as earnings growth and low financial leverage. That means the portfolio is made up of a balance of growth and value holdings with a combined P/E ratio of 22.88 at current levels. This curated mix is one of the primary reasons this fund has been so successful in generating alpha over the last several years.

On a three-year look-back, IQLT has gained 43.38% compared to the 32.23% rise in the iShares MSCI EAFE ETF (EFA). Like the rest of the global equity market, IQLT has entered correction territory and is currently sitting about 7% off its recent highs. That dip allows for new money to enter this space as a function of global rotation towards opportunities trading at a discount to their prior peak.

IQLT can take a prominent place as a core international holding because of its larger size, trading volume, low cost, and diversification qualities. That may result in the fund ranging anywhere between 25-50% of your total foreign equity allocation. The attractive characteristics of IQLT demonstrate that it can immediately supplant legacy holdings such as EFA or other traditional developed country funds.

One potential use case is to pair this type of holding alongside a more growth-oriented emerging market fund to capture a broader swath of international coverage. This would allow for a barbell approach of owning quality stocks on one end and targeting higher risk/reward opportunities on the other end.

International Idea 3: High-Yield Stocks

Many advisors are actively managing income portfolios for clients who have an expectation of prioritizing dividends over other possible factors. This may be because they love the quarterly passive stream of cash payouts, or they reinvest those proceeds back into the funds themselves to increase their holding size. Whatever the case may be, you want to be prepared with a go-to international income fund as part of your global diversification strategy.

Our preferred option in this category is to source a vehicle from one of the world's largest index fund platforms. The Vanguard International High Dividend Yield ETF (VYMI) is a $3.5 billion juggernaut that tracks the FTSE All-World ex-US High Dividend Yield Index. This includes a broad basket of more than 1,200 stocks with characteristics of above-average dividends.

The nature of the geographic profile in VYMI is such that it includes both developed and emerging market nations in a roughly 80/20 split. That allows for an all-encompassing solution to capture the entire investable dividend stock market outside the United States.

Expense Ratio:	0.22%
of Holdings:	1,237
YTD Return:	3.19%
3-Yr Return:	30.26%
Mstar Rating:	4 Star

The VYMI portfolio falls into the large-cap value category based on its stock selection criteria and its fundamental ratios support that designation. The fund sports an extremely attractive P/E ratio of 11 and a P/B ratio of 1.4 at current levels. Top holdings include many of the same mainstays as FNDX. Those crossover names are Nestle SA, Roche Holding AG, Toyota Motor Corp, Novartis AG, and Astra-Zeneca PLC. The 10 largest holdings account for approximately 16% of the fund's total net assets.

The country mix is quite varied in this ETF as well. The United Kingdom takes the top spot with a 13.8% allocation, followed by Japan (11%), Switzerland (10%), Canada (9%), and Australia (7%). The emerging market country with the largest total share of fund assets is China at 5%.

VYMI has paid out $2.89 in dividends over the trailing 12-months, which equates to a dividend yield of 4.25% using the recent share price of $68. The fund pays income quarterly to shareholders and has steadily maintained its high yield over the course of the last five years.

One item of note for those who have not invested in foreign dividend stocks is that their quarterly payouts are often lumpier than the smooth consistency of U.S. stocks. This means that certain quarters have larger dividend payments than others and thus a full year of dividend data is the best way to evaluate their yields. The ups and downs of these dividend payouts are due to varying fiscal calendars and a higher frequency of special one-time payouts that are common in foreign markets. This dividend calendar expectation should be set in advance with any clients that are due to receive an allocation to these ETFs.

The chart pattern of VYMI has begun to outpace its equitable benchmark EFA significantly over the last 52-weeks as the rotation to value stocks continues to develop. Its emphasis on high-dividend, low-P/E stocks has helped propel this fund to new all-time highs at the start of 2022 and the recent dip has been moderate as compared to the broader market.

VYMI is most appropriate as a core foreign stock allocation within the context of a diversified income portfolio. It's designed to boost total portfolio yield while simultaneously tilting your exposure towards undervalued large-cap stocks with sound fundamentals. The Vanguard traits of low cost, simplicity, and tax efficiency also are characteristics that make this fund appealing for all levels of income investors.

Conclusion

Forging a sound allocation to international stocks should be rooted in the expectation that U.S. markets are on the precipice of a new fiscal policy cycle that is likely to impact returns in the near term. Making sure that your portfolios have adequate overseas exposure can provide access to markets with meaningful upside potential in 2022.

Furthermore, the diversification component of owning global stocks can help reduce overall portfolio volatility and smooth out whipsaws in values over time.

Best,

Tom

Buybacks PKW (Invesco Buy-Back Achievers ETF)	Companies with meaningful share count reduction have outperformed over the long term with lower volatility. Currently, U.S. companies are flush with cash due to tax cuts and repatriation. In turn, share repurchases broke a new record in Q1 2018 and they're on pace to set a new record for 2018. PKW is the premier ETF to profit from buybacks (largest asset base and longest history). We also featured four alternative ETFs (SPYB, TTFS, DIVB, SYLD) and some individual stock lists.  What to do now: Buy.	Issue 21: 5/29/18	PKW: 71.36%	SPY: 77.66%
"FANG and Friends" of Emerging Markets EMQQ (Emerging Markets Internet & Ecommerce ETF)	"By 2025, annual consumption in emerging markets will reach $30 trillion—the biggest growth opportunity in the history of capitalism."—McKinsey & Company. The combination of four major forces in emerging markets make this a great investment setup: favorable demographics, increasing smartphone availability, surging wireless broadband and Wifi access, and the globalization of the capital formation process. EMQQ is the best ETF to invest in this great confluence. We also featured three alternative ETFs (ECON, KWEB, KEMQ).  What to do now: Buy.	Issue 23: 6/26/18	EMQQ: 8.62%	EEM: 21.84%

But they are now saddled with massive debts and ballooning capital structures that could be headwinds on investor returns going forward.  Many smaller stocks, however, were able to utilize government programs (PPP and others) to recapitalize healthily over the past year and those that have survived to this point are now in an extremely favorable position to capture future opportunities as the economy reopens.  So, we want to make sure you know which ETFs can give you exposure to quality small-cap companies that are 1) Financially sound, 2) Exited the pandemic with their business intact, 3) Stand to benefit from an acceleration in the economy, and 4) Could see earnings surge as the economic reopening continues.	4/20/2021	PSCD: 6.43% FXG: -0.23% RWJ: 6.18% ISCV: 5.29%	IWM: 3.44%

That's because a stagflationary environment is a very difficult one to successfully invest in as, broadly speaking, it's negative for most stocks, most bonds, and idle cash (purchasing power is eroded through inflation).  Positively, stagflation is not the most likely macro-economic scenario going forward (a stock positive reflation scenario is the most likely future macro setup). But, stagflation risks are still at multi-decade highs, so the risks can't be totally ignored, either.	8/24/2021	FDN: -21.27% RHS: 5.94% FLTR: -0.03% BCI: 15.52%	SPY: 0.96%

Today's Alpha is our annual Contrarian Issue, where we identified some of the worst-performing sectors and factors for 2021 and analyzed them to identify three sectors that we think could be poised for a big turnaround in 2022.  We have produced this annual Contrarian Issue for the last several years to serve two primary functions. First, I'm a contrarian investor at heart, and I always enjoy scouring what "didn't" work during an investment year to determine whether these relatively cheap sectors or factors present an attractive opportunity, as contrarian investing can lead to outperformance. Second, we like to provide these contrarian ideas so that if a client asks you "What's cheap right now?" or "Are there any opportunities from last year?" you have interesting, well-founded ideas that can impress clients and prospects.	12/28/2021	KWEB: -5.80% CXSE: -3.17% GDX: 0.19% SIL: -8.75% XLU: -3.30% SPLV: -4.81%	SPY: -6.09%

And, while there remains a lot of risks associated with crypto trading, the bottom line is that an advisor can only dissuade a client from cryptos for so long before it hurts the relationship.  Given that, our goal in today's Alpha issue is to highlight some of the best and most responsible strategies to provide clients with crypto exposure without taking an overabundance of risk.	1/11/2022	GBTC: -16.87% BLOK: -15.70% BITO: -13.07%	SPY: -6.37%
