In Today's Issue

- I have always believed that it's important to review every year in the markets as it draws to a close, to learn the "lessons" of each year, identify which strategies worked and which didn't, and determine if those trends will continue in the new year. Given expectations of economic and earnings recessions along with continued elevated geopolitical risks, we wanted to highlight three strategies that outperformed in 2022 and that we believe are poised to do so again in 2023.
- Investment Review 1: Low P/E Stocks with Value Tilt. Cambria Shareholder Yield ETF (SYLD) and Invesco S&P 500 Pure Value ETF (RPV). Value and defensive allocations have clearly worked in 2022 and we expect more of the same in 2023. SYLD and RPV fell just 2.6% and 2.2%, respectively compared to a 13% decline for the S&P 500 since this issue was sent in late January.
- Investment Review 2: Long-Term Bear Market Safe Havens. PIMCO Enhanced Short Maturity Active ETF (MINT), JP Morgan Ultra-Short Income ETF (JPST), First Trust Consumer Staples AlphaDEX Fund (FXG). Short-duration debt and consumer staples stocks outperformed in 2022. MINT and JPST now have 30-day SEC yields of 4.3% which is attractive with rising recession risks. FXG has a positive return (2.84%) vs. -7.14% for the S&P 500 since this early March issue.
- Investment Review 3: New Energy Reality. First Trust Natural Gas ETF (FCG). FCG has rallied 3.9% vs. -13.99% for the S&P 500 since this April issue and with natural gas demand forecasts still strong, the outlook for FCG remains positive.
- What Didn't Work: Dip buying in high-growth tech (ARK funds) and crypto ETFs.

Our 2022 Year In Review

There are so many narratives that can be written about the markets as we look back on the year 2022. It started out with the unrelenting inflationary environment forcing the Federal Reserve to aggressively raise interest rates to try and cool down prices. That ultimately created a shock throughout the global economic system that saw rapidly climbing bond yields, falling asset prices, and a pullback in risk appetites. One of the rare bright spots in this mess was the commodity markets, which shot up parabolically and then reversed course by mid-year.

The year 2022 is likely to be remembered with anxiety by investors that lived through this upheaval in the financial system and the impact it had on their portfolios. The scorecard on Page 2 illustrates a sea of red that emphasizes just how few places there were to hide this year.

Defensive sectors such as energy, utilities, healthcare, and consumer staples fared the best among major S&P groups. This is to be expected considering the flight to quality that many investors aggressively pursued. The obvious outlier among this group are energy stocks, which rode the extreme bullish wave within the commodity domain to achieve some of their most profitable quarters in decades.

The other side of that coin were heavy losses in growth-oriented areas of such as technology, consumer discretionary, and financials. These sectors were understandably discounted by sharply rising bond yields and a meaningful contraction in economic output. All the hallmarks of a recessionary environment put the brakes on sentiment for any equities that rely heavily on consistent growth.

Typically, any flight to quality in risk-off assets has benefitted the investment-grade bond market, but 2022 was not a typical year. The inversion of the yield curve created havoc among intermediate- and long-duration debt, which saw prices fall by double digits, the largest such single-year shift in bond prices in decades. The lone bright spot was essentially cash or 1-to-3-month Treasury bills that were able to produce positive net returns this year. Savers are finally being rewarded again for their capital at rest and as we head towards the 2022 exit, money market rates are nudging up against 4%.

The bottom line is that these past 12 months have brought myriad substantial changes throughout every corner of the financial markets. From our perspective, it's important to not only have been in-step with these trends, but also to have created value through this service in the form of market-beating recommendations.

Our goal has always been to offer a performance advantage in your portfolio by identifying best-of-breed solutions that add real-world alpha.

We have been fortunate this year that several of our recommendations outpaced conventional benchmarks and just a handful fell flat. Many economists and market watchers expect a similarly bumpy ride throughout 2023 and thus we want to be prepared to navigate that turbulence with thoughtful investment selection techniques.

This is a period when your clients truly benefit from the steadfast and evidence-based investment approach of a professional advisor rather than the whims of an anxiety-ridden financial psychology. Our year in review looks at how these strategies came to be and whether they will stand the test of 2023 as well.

Investment Review 1: Low P/E Stocks with Value Tilt

As far back as January, we suspected that 2022 was going to be an outlier year. The Fed was starting to signal its intentions towards hiking rates and our investment thesis was that this event would meaningfully impact growth portfolios. The commonly held logic is that rate hikes act as a discounting mechanism for future profits. They generally make financing more difficult to secure, increase lending costs, and dampen the credit worthiness of more speculative companies.

That's exactly the scenario that subsequently played out, which is why we stressed the importance of owning companies with strong balance sheets and low P/E ratios.

That tilt towards value-oriented fundamentals proved to be a key driver of a relative alpha this year that investors are still reaping the rewards of today.

Two prominent funds we highlighted were the Cambria Shareholder Yield ETF (SYLD) and Invesco S&P 500 Pure Value ETF (RPV). Both of which utilize smart-beta screening criteria as part of their stock selection methodology.

To refresh your memory of how these funds operate, SYLD starts with a universe of U.S.-listed companies with market capitalizations greater than $200 million. It then scores stocks based on three key factors: dividend payout ratio, a net reduction in debt, and aggregate share buybacks. The 100 stocks with the best combined scores in these fields are then added to the ETF basket.

The three-pillar shareholder yield philosophy is one that has been extensively vetted by Cambria as a driver of long-term alpha. It avoids the traps that

The three-pillar shareholder yield philosophy has been extensively vetted by Cambria as a driver of long-term alpha. It avoids the traps that many investors make by only prioritizing one factor such as high dividends in their investment selection criteria. Companies that are prioritizing all three of these elements are actively returning profits to shareholders in a healthy and sustainable way.

While the fund doesn't expressly market itself as a value-centric solution, the factors that screen for top-quality stocks are creatively achieving this goal. Its secret sauce is being able to identify profitable companies with high free cash flow that are making smart choices with their balance sheets. That's exactly the type of stocks you want to own in a rising rate environment where smart investors prioritize sound fundamentals over excessive leverage.

Similarly, the Invesco S&P 500 Pure Value ETF (RPV) is an index-oriented fund that owns approximately 100 value stocks culled from the broader S&P 500 Index. What makes this fund unique is that it puts a more stringent valuation screen against the parent benchmark to rule out blended or ambiguous style stocks. The result is a more concentrated portfolio of "pure" companies with characteristics embodying strong balance sheets and low-priced valuations.

Another attractive feature of the RPV portfolio is that it weights holdings according to the highest value scores rather than market-cap or equal-capital allocations. This creates a stronger influence of fundamentally attractive companies such as Berkshire Hathaway Inc, Prudential Financial, Cigna Corp, Viacom CBS, and Lincoln National Corp.

The total return of these ETFs in comparison to the broader U.S. domestic stock market benchmarks has been impressive since we delivered them to your inbox on January 25. SYLD has notched a mild drop of 2.64%, while RPV has given back just 2.17%. That's compared to a 12.82% decline in the S&P 500 Index and a sizeable 23.77% plunge in the NASDAQ 100 Index over that same time frame.

What's been impressive about these funds is their smoother price pattern throughout the year. They are functioning in the capacity of a low-volatility core equity solution with enhanced dividend qualities. Factors that clients are surely prioritizing in this type of market as a strategic advantage compared to similar alternatives.

The proven track records of SYLD and RPV should give investors confidence that they are properly aligned to combat the unique economic environment we currently find ourselves in. If the first half of 2023 continues to offer similar challenges, it stands to reason that these funds will provide a measure of comparative stability. Given that these ETFs are still trading at attractive fundamentals, there is still an opportunity for those who missed owning these at the beginning of the year to consider them once more in early 2023.

Investment Review 2: Long-Term Bear Market Safe Havens

In early March, we theorized that investors could be looking at the prospect of a prolonged bear market that would test the resolve of even the most ardent buy-and-hold fanatic. We went on to stipulate:

The real destruction in a multi-year bear market isn't necessarily the drop in portfolio valuations. It's the confidence that is lost among investors in the capability to weather the storm and come out stronger on the other side.

History has shown that the market always recovers and eventually surpasses these valleys. However, it's the psychological damage that can be far more devastating and impact your business and client relationships. Having a game plan to protect your clients from these extraordinary events will preserve capital and mitigate angst. Both of which will be key to survival among your peers.

One of our primary strategies in this type of environment was to reduce allocations to higher-volatility assets such as stocks and long-duration bonds in favor of cash or short-term debt instruments. Cash can be a temporary landing spot for client capital, but ultimately, they are going to want to see it deployed reasonably in another vehicle that is offering a favorable return profile.

Two options for that task that coincided sagely with the volatility in stocks and bond yields were the PIMCO Enhanced Short Maturity Active ETF (MINT) and JP Morgan Ultra-Short Income ETF (JPST). These funds both utilize an active portfolio management strategy that targets primarily ultra-short term investment grade bonds. That typically translates to an effective duration of six months or less, which is well suited for a market where short-term interest rates are moving sharply higher.

The chart here shows how well these funds did in comparison to a conventional intermediate-term benchmark such as the iShares U.S. Aggregate Bond ETF (AGG). Both experienced a fraction of total price volatility, and in fact, JPST managed to provide shareholders with positive net total returns since our March 8 report.

Looking in the rearview mirror is all well and good, but it's also worth examining how these funds stand up in today's market too. Both offer 30-day SEC yields of 4.30% with thoroughly diversified pools of high-quality and short-term bonds. By contrast, AGG is sporting a 30-day SEC yield of 3.88% with an effective duration of 6.44 years. You receive 10% less yield in AGG with 12x the interest rate risk. Let that sink in for a moment.

The strategy behind these ultra-short-term bonds is that they are appealing and stable places for capital as the Fed continues to put the brakes on the economy by tightening monetary policy. Once we reach that peak inflection point at some future date, it will start to make sense to look at intermediate- and long-duration bonds as capital appreciation plays once again. You already know we will be preparing and distributing sound ideas for that event well in advance.

Another key investment sector we highlighted in our long-term bear market playbook was consumer staples stocks, which proved to be a prescient opportunity. Consumer staples stocks are a great place to look for steady market correlation with low volatility and we provided just the right vehicle for this task.

The First Trust Consumer Staples AlphaDEX Fund (FXG) is a quantitatively constructed portfolio of high-quality stocks selected from the broad Russell 1000 Index. The AlphaDEX screening criteria ranks stocks according to a combination of growth and value characteristics that scores each eligible company. Those scores are then used to select the 40 best-of-breed companies within the sector group for inclusion in the portfolio basket.

The result is a highly intelligent and active share approach to the consumer staples theme that emphasizes a much different subset of stocks as compared to traditional market-cap-weighted benchmarks such as XLP or VDC. The underlying holdings in FXG tend to lean far more towards food and beverage producers in the small- and mid-cap realms rather than the mega-cap consumer goods companies such as Proctor & Gamble and Coca-Cola.

Some of those top food and beverage producers include companies such as Archer-Daniels Midland, Bunge Limited, Corteva Inc, and Tyson Foods Inc. There is also exposure to Kraft Heinz, CVS Health Corp, and Pepsi Co.

Furthermore, there are caps on individual security and classification weights so that the portfolio doesn't become overly biased towards larger stocks.

FXG has handily outperformed the broader market since our March report.

The fund gained 2.84% as compared to the 7.14% decline in the S&P 500 Index. The notable driver being the reduced volatility of this fund through the ups and downs of the last nine months. The evidence points towards this fund's price trend acting exactly as intended by providing a correlation to the equity markets with less relative downside capture. The inelastic nature of consumer staples companies' business models makes for an enticing sector to own through any type of economic slowdown.

Investment Review 3: New Energy Reality

One of the trends we latched onto early in 2022 is the transition of global energy needs to progressively cleaner resources. This goal is particularly challenging in Europe where the disruption in gas supplies from Russia has led to hurdles in meeting energy demand at reasonable costs.

The global objective is to ultimately utilize more sources of pure green energy such as hydrogen, solar, wind, and water. However, we also need reasonable fonts of cleaner power to fill the gaps until the advanced technology and cost become more efficient for widespread use. That led us to cite natural gas as a key energy production opportunity with attractive fundamentals for investors.

In April, we identified the First Trust Natural Gas ETF (FCG) as one of the best-of-breed solutions for diversified portfolios to capitalize on this opportunity.

This fund is based on the ISE-Revere Natural Gas Index, which selects exchange-listed companies that derive a substantial portion of their revenue from the exploration and production of this vital resource.

The index screening criteria starts with known companies in the natural gas world and filters out those that don't meet certain requirements for proven gas reserves. The remaining stocks must also meet minimum market capitalization, liquidity, and fundamental filters to be eligible for inclusion in the basket.

The result is a group of 44 high-quality U.S. stocks and master limited partnerships that are focused on this industry. Top holdings currently include ConocoPhillips (COP), EOG Resources (EOG), Occidental Petroleum (OXY), Devon Energy (DVN), and DCP Midstream LP (DCP). The ETF uses a capped-weighting methodology within the basket to ensure no single holding accounts for more than 5% of the total portfolio.

Since our April 5 report, FCG has outperformed SPY by a double-digit margin with several rounds of impressive rallies under its belt. While more volatile than the broader market, it has acted as a robust tactical allocation within the energy space that is targeted towards secular profit opportunities.

Natural gas exploration and production companies receive most of the attention within the energy segment. Yet, if the Russia/Ukraine conflict has taught us anything, it is that maintaining an effective transportation network is just as crucial for uninterrupted supply chain security. That's why we highlighted two LNG logistics stocks that have continued to reward shareholders over the last eight months.

- Cheniere Energy Inc. (LNG), which produces and exports liquid natural gas. The company has rapidly grown to be the largest LNG company in the United States and second largest in the world. It operates liquification facilities in Texas and Louisiana as well as terminals to export the product globally.
- Flex LNG Ltd (FLNG). The company operates a fleet of 13 fuel efficient, fifth-generation LNG carriers that transport liquid natural gas around the world. Originally domiciled in Bermuda, the company offered shares via the Oslo stock exchange in 2017 and listed via the NYSE in June 2019 under the ticker FLNG.

The chart here demonstrates how well these stocks have done since we introduced them in April with uptrends that continue to demonstrate a competitive advantage in this market. They are uniquely positioned to benefit from the increased emphasis on supply chain security and the changeover to natural gas that cleaner government-led energy strategies demand.

In our opinion, this new energy reality represents a long-term secular shift that will continue to bear fruit in the years to come. Even if world governments can get commodity inflation under control, there will still be a concerted effort to shift more resources towards the natural gas sector as a cleaner energy alternative. This creates numerous opportunities for investors to profit as the progression continues to ramp up.

Investment Review: What Didn't Work

Any good adviser knows it's important to acknowledge opportunities that have yet to develop as they were originally intended. We recognize that not everything we highlight is going to be an instant success and some are intended for use during a very specific market scenario. Reviewing those investment strategies can also be helpful to reinforce the original thesis or potentially recognize that it may not be the best time to own that particular asset.

Near the midpoint of the year, we examined the high-growth-oriented ARK fund lineup along with some of Cathie Wood's highest-conviction holdings spread among these investment tools. The initial thesis and timing behind that report was to highlight some of the most beaten-down areas of the stock market for those investors that are searching for deep value opportunities within the technology sector.

Some of these stocks included Zoom Video Communications (ZM), Tesla Inc (TSLA), Roku Inc (ROKU), and Block Inc (SQ). All of which had fallen precipitously in the first half of the year and have yet to demonstrate any meaningful turnaround. It's unlikely that these stocks will take flight until economic conditions begin to shift towards a more accommodative fiscal policy and a supportive recovery phase of the market cycle.

We acknowledged that caveat along with the understanding that the pioneering holdings within the ARK funds are designed for more aggressive investors with long time horizons. Those factors still hold true today and it will be interesting to see just how these stocks respond to changing trends in 2023.

Another speculative technology trend that failed to turn around its misfortunes this year is anything in the cryptocurrency space.

We explored several of the top funds and new vehicles that were introduced in 2022 so that advisors would be up to speed on this burgeoning industry. However, the uncertain economic environment was too daunting for crypto to overcome in addition to several high-profile exchange implosions from the likes of FTX, Voyager Digital, and Celsius.

It remains to be seen if crypto is biding its time to ultimately resurge as a dominant financial opportunity, or if it will remain a rather obscure curiosity within the global markets. Many famous investors remain split on that issue and the lack of cohesive regulation is one obstacle that still must be addressed if the segment is going to have any long-term appeal.

Lastly, it's worth noting that international markets were unable to break free from the pernicious downtrend that domestic stocks found themselves mired in. One of the key headwinds for international equities in 2022 was the strength of the U.S. dollar and concomitant weakness in foreign currencies. That factor weighed on both developed and emerging markets, in addition to parallel hurdles that included: inflation, rising interest rates, and the ongoing war in Eastern Europe.

Notably, that major international benchmarks such as EFA and EEM have notched similar year-to-date returns as U.S. indices, despite facing arguably harsher relative economic conditions. That may bode well for a resurgence in overseas stocks when the eventual recovery phase begins to take hold.

Conclusion

It is important to celebrate successes in a year that has tested our resolve on numerous levels. We have been fortunate to maintain a level-headed approach to the markets throughout 2022 and continue to believe that more alpha opportunities will develop for our portfolios in the new year.

As always, we will be there to offer our guidance and research in the pursuit of market-beating returns every step of the way.

Best,

Tom

KBA is our gateway to front-run massive index funds that will be forced to buy its underlying holdings. What to do now: Buy.	Issue 16: 3/20/18	KBA: 2.75%	ACWX: 4.36%
Anti-Trade War QABA (First Trust Nasdaq ABA Community Bank Index Fund)	QABA is a play to protect against trade war ramifications (97% of its sales are U.S.-sourced). Additionally, it should also be a beneficiary of U.S. tax reform, in that, smaller U.S. companies should capture most of the 35% to 21% corporate tax cut. We also featured three more ETFs (AMCA, AIRR, KRE) and two exclusive stock screens—run through Cap IQ—for advisors to share with clients who have trade war concerns. What to do now: Buy.	Issue 18: 4/17/18	QABA: 9.95%	SPY: 53.58%
Foreign Small Caps VSS (Vanguard FTSE All-World ex-US Small-Cap ETF) DLS (WisdomTree International Small-Cap Dividend Fund)	Most advisors don't allocate to international small caps. But, we think they should reconsider. This hidden asset class holds several advantages over its U.S. equivalents: cheaper valuations, less volatility, lower correlations, higher dividend yields, and past outperformance. We highlight multiple individual ETFs, ETF combinations, and actively-managed mutual funds that do the trick. What to do now: Buy.	Issue 19: 5/1/18	VSS: -1.46% DLS: -9.34%	EFA: 8.49%
Disruptive Innovation ARKK (ARK Innovation ETF)	Investing in the "cornerstone themes of disruptive innovation" has resulted in huge profits over time (think Amazon, Apple, and Netflix). ARK sees current investment opportunities in innovation platforms, such as automation, energy storage, DNA sequencing, next generation internet, blockchain technology, etc. ARK's top innovation-based themes are all represented in ARKK. In 2017, ARKK was the #1 performing ETF (excluding leveraged and inverse ETFs) with a return of 87%! What to do now: Buy.	Issue 20: 5/15/18	ARKK: -24.30%	SPY: 52.90%
Buybacks PKW (Invesco Buy-Back Achievers ETF)	Companies with meaningful share count reduction have outperformed over the long term with lower volatility. Currently, U.S. companies are flush with cash due to tax cuts and repatriation. In turn, share repurchases broke a new record in Q1 2018 and they're on pace to set a new record for 2018. PKW is the premier ETF to profit from buybacks (largest asset base and longest history). That's because a stagflationary environment is a very difficult one to successfully invest in as, broadly speaking, it's negative for most stocks, most bonds, and idle cash (purchasing power is eroded through inflation). Positively, stagflation is not the most likely macro-economic scenario going forward (a stock positive reflation scenario is the most likely future macro set-up). Today's Alpha is our annual Contrarian Issue, where we identified some of the worst-performing sectors and factors for 2021 and analyzed them to identify three sectors that we think could be poised for a big turnaround in 2022. We have produced this annual Contrarian Issue for the last several years to serve two primary functions. First, I'm a contrarian investor at heart, and I always enjoy scouring what "didn't" work during an investment year to determine whether these relatively cheap sectors or factors present an attractive opportunity, as contrarian investing can lead to outperformance. Second, we like to provide these contrarian ideas so that if a client asks you "What's cheap right now?" or "Are there any opportunities from last year?" you have interesting, well-founded ideas that can impress clients and prospects.	12/28/2021	KWEB: -17.91% CXSE: -27.93% GDX: -4.43% SIL: -19.59% XLU: 0.59% SPLV: -5.37%	SPY: -19.75%

This Alpha issue is an important complement to what we've been discussing in the regular Sevens Report, namely that we believe the best way to weather this increased volatility in markets is by allocating to "Quality" stocks, sectors, and ETFs. For us, "quality" means those stocks and ETFs with lower relative price-to-earnings (P/E) and price-to-book (P/B) ratios, strong free cash flow, and solid shareholder yield. We believe these stocks and sectors will be the most insulated from the effects of interest rate hikes, possibly slowing growth and other headwinds, and find themselves as high-quality landing spots for investment capital.	1/25/2022	FXO: -7.09% QVAL: -3.12% SYLD: -1.92% RPV: -2.11%	SPY: -10.52%

We hope the analysis in this issue will serve as a potential blueprint for how to outperform if the last four months of 2022 look like the first six months of 2022. Notably, we excluded energy and commodities broadly from this research, and there’s one reason for that: Energy and commodity returns were turbo-charged earlier in 2022 by the Russia/Ukraine war, and we simply don’t want to assume another similar event occurring between now and year-end. Put differently, we don’t want to assume another specifically bullish event occurs that sends those sectors higher.	9/7/2022	RYU: -5.32% SPHD: 1.38% USFR: 1.05%	SPY: -3.01%

Our goal with these strategies is clear: Minimize the losses and be able to "survive" to take advantage of the ultimate longer-term buying opportunity. To be clear, a material break of the lows is not a foregone conclusion, and I hope none of these strategies are ultimately needed. It is possible that over the next several weeks/months we get 1) Better than feared earnings, 2) A decline in inflation via the September CPI, and 3) An eventual Fed pivot and markets find a bottom. But, the reality is that asset markets are currently facing very strong headwinds and we must address the fact that a break of the June lows is entirely possible. As such we need to have an action plan should the selling materially accelerate that can minimize losses and ensure we're positioned to take advantage of the long-term opportunity once stocks ultimately find a bottom.	10/4/2022	SH0: -3.31% PSQ: 5.26% PTLC: 0.72% SGOV: 0.80%	SPY: 1.55%

But that has changed during the 2022 bond market rout and yields on munis now are at multi-year highs. With federal funding still in place for pandemic programs, strong tax receipts, and a still-solid U.S. economy, the credit outlook for municipal bonds is stronger than the muni bond price action would imply, and we think that creates a potential opportunity. As such, we wanted to profile three ETFs that we think provide diversified exposure to the muni bond market.	10/18/2022	JMST: 0.85% HYMB: 2.27% MMIT: 3.27%	SPY: 3.56%

MOAT Stocks. VanEck Morningstar Wide Moat ETF (MOAT). Morningstar ESG Wide Moat ETF (MOTE). VanEck Morningstar SMID Moat ETF (SMOT).	This Alpha issue is focused on specific stocks that we think can best withstand the coming economic slow-down, and in doing so help clients outperform. Specifically, as we approach this economic contraction, analysts are rightly advocating for stocks that are less sensitive to economic growth, have strong cash flows, and have low debt ratios, as they should relatively outperform in a slow growth/no growth environment. But, there's a subset of these types of companies that may be even best positioned for the coming economic environment: MOAT stocks. The term, coined by Morningstar, reflects a sustainable competitive advantage a particular stock has in its business category that its peers will be hard-pressed to overcome. That moat gives pricing power, hyper-efficiency, or fundamental value to its customers that other companies can't duplicate to the same degree. The moat methodology scores prospective companies via five criteria: Switching Costs, Intangible Assets, Network Effects, Cost Advantage, and Efficient Scale. Screening for these criteria has resulted in this strategy with similar holdings to the S&P 500 but that historically outperforms that benchmark.	11/1/2022	MOAT: 3.26% MOTE: 2.55% SMOT: 1.69%	SPY: -0.09%
Small Cap Stocks iShares Core S&P Small Cap ETF (IJR). Invesco S&P SmallCap 600 Revenue ETF (RWJ). Pacer U.S. Small Cap Cash Cows 100 ETF (CALF).	Very quietly, small-cap stocks have outperformed the S&P 500 by 300 bps and the Nasdaq by 800 bps over the past five months. And, due to multiple factors, small caps may now be poised to provide growth to portfolios over the medium and longer term. That may seem like an odd statement given small caps have lagged for the past decade, and now face a slowing economy and higher rates, which are generally considered negative for small-cap stocks. But, the numbers don't lie: Despite slowing growth and higher rates, small caps have outperformed over the past several months. More broadly, the statistical reality is this: small caps have outperformed the S&P 500 during recessions, as the Russell 2000 has fallen an average of -4.1% vs. -5.9% for the S&P 500. Additionally, during the recovery phase of the economy (which follows the recession) the Russell 2000 has an average return of 31.7% vs. 21.7% for the S&P 500.	11/29/2022	IJR: -4.34% RWJ: -4.78% CALF: -6.03%	SPY: -3.11%
